Computing the Range of Real Functions

by G. Alefeld, Karlsruhe

It is well known that the range of a real function over an interval can be included by simply evaluating the given expression in the interval arithmetic sense. In this talk basic facts concerning the distance of this evaluation to the exact range are discussed. Especially the so-called centered form and the higher order approximations of the range are discussed. Finally some applications are discussed in more detail.